There is no book too scary.
Scary books = Creative and Imaginary minds.

Step 1: Gathering a group of people together to not ban horror books just based on the content of the book. First we would have to create a letter informing people that horror books are not inappropriate books unless the adults choose to let their child read a book that might not be suitable for his/her age group. Then we would send this letter to the authorities explaining why we are against banning books. Next we would protest around the community to keep people notified about the banned book struggle. Finally we would address them that there are specific policies for books and minors have the ability to read whatever they want so banning books shouldn't even be a thing.

Step 2: Having all the age groups on our side to fight against banning books would be the best thing for the cause. Having people in our ranks from ages 8 to 88 would help in having someone from each genre. The age groups could go through each banned book and tell why that book should not be banned. Securing the age groups is vital for the fight against our freedom to read. Targeting the age groups is key in protecting future generations against book banning.

The 3rd step: Why books are needed. All books are good books. It's doesn't matter what genre it is. Having all these books can do a lot for us. We as students need these books to help us out in everyday life. These books help us in our educational purposes, creativity, and the way our minds work. Books can creative good imaginary minds and can help us distinguish what the major points are in the book. They are also suspenseful and makes us want more from the author. Books are a way to get involve in reading so we can better ourselves. Without books, we would be bored beyond imagination and wouldn't have any type of creativity to our lives.
